HISTORY

In a legend, Saint George—a soldier venerated in Christianity—defeats a dragon. The story grew that the dragon originally entered Britain from villages. When they ran out of bread and livestock for the dragon, they started giving up a human tribute once a year. This was acceptable to the villagers until a prince was chosen as the next offering. The saint then goes to rescue the prince and kills the dragon. The narrative was first told in Cappadocia in the central sources of the 11th and 12th centuries, and transferred to Libya in the 13th-century Golden Legend (1).
